FORGERIES OF S. P. STODDARD IN MASSACHUSETTS.—Referring to this case the Northampton Gazette says: The forgeries were committed upon his uncle in Boston, Charles Stoddard, a well-known business man of that city. While in Boston young Stoddard did a flourishing business of various kinds. He boarded at a first-class hotel, and when his bill was presented he gave a forged check on his uncle, making it several hundred dollars larger than the amount he owed, and received back the amount in bills, then left before the forgery was found out. He bought a gold watch in the same manner, and took the change, a hundred or two dollars, and left for parts unknown. Another operation of his was to purchase $1,300 in diamonds and jewelry and order them to be sent to his uncle's on Beacon street. The shopkeeper, knowing the responsibility of his uncle, was too glad to do it, but to his own sorrow, as it afterwards appeared. When they came Stoddard was on hand to take them at the door and soon disappeared, and that was the last seen of the diamonds or Stoddard. He left Boston and the detectives were unable to arrest him, although they followed him through the West. For six months they lost all trace of him, and it is understood that the last of this time he was in the Tombs at New York for some misdemeanor and had only recently got out when arrested in this town. He is the same fellow who sold his brother as a substitute during the war, and induced several other from Northampton to enlist with a view to taking the bounty and then desert. On the night of his arrest here he undertook to swindle two of our clothing dealers, but they knew him too well and declined to be taken in.

CURIOUS PEOPLE AT SARATOGA.—Like all other fashionable resorts Saratoga has its quota of "lunatic folks." Humana natura will out, and in an extended walk through the parlors, dining hall, and along the piazzas, we shall meet the following people:

The five stout ladies who do not believe in Mr. Banting's theory. The seven ladies who wear white pique dresses bound with black. The lady who always finds too much cinnamon in her wine sauce. The lady who invariably calls for the "little ears" when she goes roaring. The lady with six diamond rings on her left hand. The mother and daughter who wear wide white collars with cherry-red bows. The pale young lady in a lake-colored silk, who drinks "vast quantities of milk." The young man who plays billiards until midnight, and gets up at 8 o'clock the next morning. The United States Army officer in a "bran new" uniform, and black moustache, exquisitely twisted. The nice-looking gentleman with smooth hair and big whiskers, whose promising son carries a big gun. The young lady who sits in a breeze, and objects to walking on the piazzas after night-fall. The young lady who sent for a saucer "ten minutes ago," and thinks its "queer" that it doesn't come. The handsome, elderly, affectionate gentleman who keeps his arm about the waist of his only daughter. The young lady (in black) who always asks her "par" to taste the milk and "see" if it is sour. The beautiful young lady who is afraid she is establishing a reputation for an old maid, being fond of gray.

A WALKING CAR.—A man in New York has invented and patented a device for the propulsion of land vehicles and vessels. The device is to make a carriage move forward on its own wheels, turning against the carriage, and not against the ground, that being touched only by a series of feet which come to the ground and rise from it with the rotation of the wheels, which run on a sort of endless rail under the carriage and attached to it. The contrivance is believed to be applicable to farm uses and heavy freight, as well as to ordinary passenger carrying, and to be specially adapted to swampy and boggy lands, into which wheels sink readily; for the feet of this carriage, which alone touch the ground, can be made as broad as necessary so avoid sinking. The device can be used for propelling vessels through the water by substituting paddles instead of feet under the wheels; and a boat is now in course of building on this plan for towing canal boats.

SUPERSTITION.—A correspondent of the Richmond Dispatch writing from King and Queen, says there is quite a sensation among the negroes of that county, over a miraculous story, which runs thus: A negro man proposed on Sunday morning to go fishing, and when his wife remonstrated with him, he blasphemously said that he would "go early and catch a mess of fish before the Lord waked up." He went, and after catching one fish, he sunk up to his armpits in a quagmire. The story goes that he is still there—that no one but his wife, who feeds him, can approach him without sinking in blood, and that a mysterious voice proclaims that he is doomed to remain there until the judgment day. This wonderful story has been announced from the pulpit by negro preachers, and is religiously believed by the negroes generally.
